The guy in it doesn't exist.

A gamer playing Counter-Strike in the middle of the ocean.

The first series. February 2026. No client, no brief.

Reposted twice by Elon Musk.	A community note flagged the borrowed gameplay. TF1 investigated, then published our confirmation that the gamer was generated.	Every film we make ships labeled as AI.

Every headset ad happens at a desk.

RGB light, a hand on the product, a voice saying it feels great. The chair and the mouse get the same ad. People have seen that one. They haven't seen a headset in the middle of the ocean.

We build a film around your product, then cut it into a campaign.

Your product keeps its real shape and logo. We build the scene around it, then deliver the film and campaign cutdowns, with usage rights agreed before production.

01 Concept 3 to 5 concepts, on paper Written for your product. You pick one before anything is produced.	02 Production One production, 9:16 We make the concept you picked, once, as a vertical hero film.	03 Kit 8 to 12 assets Hooks, endings and cuts from that one production, all in 9:16.	04 Report Day 30 How the film did, with a recommendation for the next wave.
Paid usage 6 months, every channel	Revisions 2 rounds	Delivery 10 to 15 business days	Payment Half, then half

Rights: paid usage on every channel for six months, and category exclusivity for the term.
